

SHEPARD SUIT IS WITHDRAWN

Continued that she was misted by business rivals, Mrs. Lucretia R. Shepard of Melrose has withdrawn the suit brought against her younger son, Walter L. Shepard, in which she sought to recover certain shares of stock.

Mrs. Shepard is seventy years old, and having willed 250 shares of stock in a local silver manufacturing company to this son, later decided to give it to him outright. The block of stock was valued at $50,000. Its possession gave young Sheard a controlling interest in the company, he previously having secured, through purchase, still another block of stock formerly held by Chester H. Shepard, an elder brother.

Following this transaction, it is said that Mrs. Shepard was approached by business rivals. They told her, she says, that the younger brother's control of the business would be injurious to all concerned. This is alleged to have been responsible for her initial suit, which she has now withdrawn, convinced that she was mistaken in the first place.

Do Your Shopping Early

Buy your Christmas gifts early—early in the month and early in the day—in the morning if possible. That will be your biggest gift of the holidays to the workers behind the counters and on the delivery wagons. In addition, shopping early assures earlier delivery, satisfaction, better and more satisfactory selections, without the worry and nervous strain of "last minute" buying.

Christmas Silk Petticoats

THE Silk Petticoat always lends itself to gift-making because it can be selected from both the practical and luxurious standpoints. This year, however, simple, it is a combination of elegance and beauty. The materials are rich and the colorings brilliant, for brilliancy in the petticoat is highly desired. The style of trimming is decidedly unusual in both the imported models and those of domestic make, which follow the French idea for flat embellishment.

Among them are petticoats of Charmeuse, Chiffon, Taffeta in plain and fancy effects; seaming Bretonne, Mousseline, and for evening wear, delicate crepe-de-chine and even filmy chiffons, lace trimmed, beaded and spangled. The Italian Silk Jersey Top Petticoats with its flounce of Charmeuse or mousseline is a petticoat still in the lead for street wear.

Prices from 2.95 to $5.00

American Selects Star School Football Eleveens

Although a bit late, the AMERICAN select committee has announced the eleven players of the team in Greater Boston.

The material to select from is exceptionally good and in many instances the players are as evenly matched for position as it was hard to pick the first team for the honor alone.

The season just past has been the most successful. The new rules that went into effect this fall proved to be the proper thing for the schools. A number of good teams were developed among the high schools, and as a rule most of the games were interesting and well played.

Malcolm High is considered the champion of Eastern Massachusetts and the winners of the blue and gold won the championship of the Southern League. Many think that Everett is the strongest team, but they did not play.

Doane of Somerville Best.

The national material this year has been of high class and the three men selected for the first eleven are among the best teams developed in a school team for several years. Earl Doane of Somerville High stood out above all others at the fullback position. He did not only score a second through to himself, but he was in the line and heavy and is the hardest man to stop among the schoolboys. His work alone was many times that of the other players.

Both these boys have played wonderful games in the backfield and it was their cutting efforts that saved the team from being pulled and the other players from being pulled and the other players from being pulled.

For the ends on the fullback position, Remond of Madison High stands out among the quarterbacks. He has played a very good game and has been a very good player in the backfield.

For the ends on the fullback position, Remond of Madison High stands out among the quarterbacks. He has played a very good game and has been a very good player in the backfield.

Kempston Star at Quarterback.

Butler of Malden High and Sands of Cambridge High and Latta have been playing good football and these men are selected for the second team. These men are picked for their positions by McCarthy and they are picked for the third team in the backfield position.

Carl Thatcher has been awarded the fullback position on the second team with McCarthy of Boston Latin on the third team. Thatcher is a great all-around player and has been a very good player in the backfield.

For the ends on the fullback position, Remond of Madison High stands out among the quarterbacks. He has played a very good game and has been a very good player in the backfield.

Plenty of Good Linemen.

A score of worthy linemen has been developed this past season and it was hard to pick the right men. Of course these selections may not suit everyone but after careful consideration the committee believes he has the men picked for the team.

For the ends on the fullback position, Remond of Madison High stands out among the quarterbacks. He has played a very good game and has been a very good player in the backfield.

BOSTON AMERICAN

80 AND 82 SUMMER ST., BOSTON, DECEMBER 3, 1912.

Largest Circulation in New England,
DAILY AND SUNDAY.

The Public Wants Later Trains and It Should Make That Fact Plain to the Railroad Com- mission Tomorrow

The hearing before the Railroad Commission on the subject of later trains at night from Boston to the surrounding cities and towns takes place tomorrow (Wednesday) afternoon at 2:30, at the rooms of the Railroad Commission, No. 90 Beacon street.

The AMERICAN urges everybody who believes that the present system of sewing up a great city at 11:30 every night is antiquated, medieval and absurd, to attend this hearing, to express by their voice or their presence their protest against it.

The business of the railroads is to transport people, and the railroads of Boston are not doing their duty when they close up their gates at 11:30 and tell people who want to go home to walk or go to a hotel.

If the railroads which serve Boston were up-to-date, their managers would realize that it would be very profitable to encourage people in the suburbs to come into the city in the early evening and to go home comfortably at midnight or a little later.

But the Boston railroads never do anything until they are forced to do it, and they are opposed just now, any change in their existing schedules. That is why it is necessary to convince the Railroad Commission that there is need for better service.

The Boston AMERICAN takes a broad view of this matter. It is not moved because some people in Braintree or Winchester would like to stay in the city a little longer. Very likely the larger proportion of the citizens of the outlying districts are content with the present transportation system because they never had a better one.

The Boston AMERICAN is in favor of trains to all the surrounding cities and towns after midnight and later, because it believes that a truly great city, such as Boston is going to be, requires such service.

We can never support the fine hotels and institutions of entertainment and culture in Boston that we should until all the people who get their living from Boston are permitted to assist in supporting the institutions that are necessary to a great city.

We can never have New York and Chicago until we have provided all our people with the same excellent transportation facilities by day and by night that those cities have done.

The spectacle of people leaving a theatre or an opera, or hurrying past a pleasant restaurant because they are afraid of missing their last train, has no place in a great city. The trains should not go until people are ready to depart.

A railroad is a public service corporation; a servant, not a master of the public. It should never be necessary for the public to appeal to a railroad commission for proper facilities to carry them home after the theatre or opera or after a supper in a hotel or restaurant.

But since it is necessary, let the appeal be a vigorous one; let there be such a throng of petitioners that the railroad attorneys will be afraid to offer their usual impudent plea that there is no real demand for better service.

Mr. Fisher--and Congress--Will Surely Consider and Supply San Francisco's Water Needs

Water Company Speculators, Backed by Lobbyists and Ill-Informed Sentimentalists, Will Not Keep San Francisco and Its Suburbs
from a Pure Water Supply

Copyright, 1912, by American Journal-Budget

Mayor Rolph, of San Francisco, is in Washington at the head of a delegation which includes engineers, geologists and others scientifically well informed, to secure pure water and common decency for San Francisco from the national government.

San Francisco's water supply is inadequate. In many districts women have been compelled during the hours of the night to collect water in buckets and in pans that they might have a supply for the day. The national government represented by Mr. Fisher, an intelligent public servant, has power to give San Francisco what she needs and should have.

What San Francisco needs is a permit to create a magnificent lake in the Hetch-Hetchy Valley in the Sierras.

The creation of this lake on the floor of the Hetch-Hetchy Valley would make even more beautiful the already beautiful region. A magnificent lake of pure water would be created high up in the mountains. A scenic highway would surround it and add to the beauty of the Yosemite National Park.

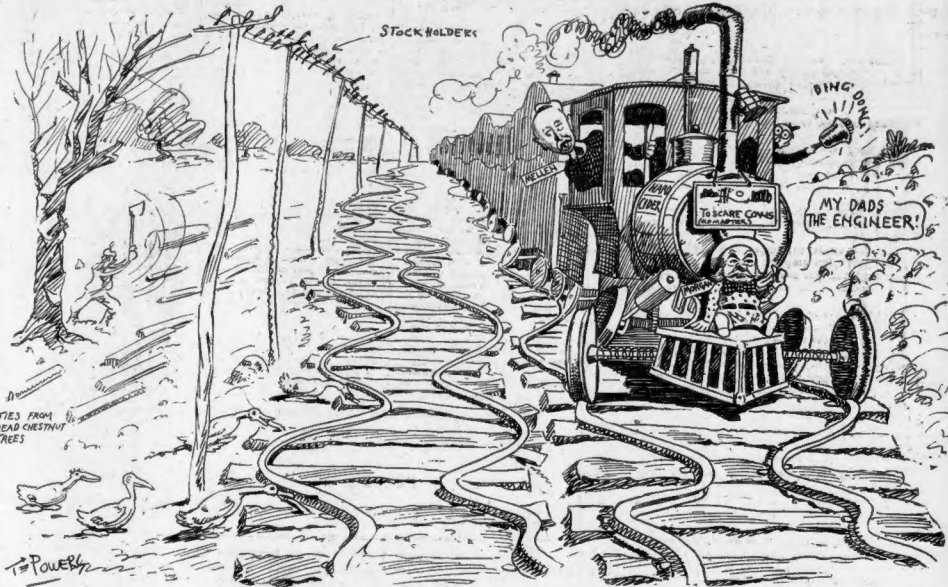

What is more important, this mountain lake will forever supply San Francisco and many other towns with an abundance of pure mountain water.

The health of the city and the happiness of the city will be increased.

AND WHAT NO PUBLIC OFFICIAL CAN IGNORE, SAN FRANCISCO WILL BE SECURED AGAINST THE POSSIBILITY OF A WATER FAMINE--SO DISASTROUS IN THE GREAT FIRE THAT DESTROYED, BUT DID NOT DISCOURAGE, THE WONDERFUL WESTERN CITY.

Irrigation speculators oppose the plan, and the Spring Valley Water Company, which wants to sell an inadequate plant to the city of San Francisco for twenty-five millions of dollars, has lobbyists on hand.

There is no doubt, however, that Mr. Fisher and Congress will consider first of all the needs of a great city and its hundreds of thousands of inhabitants, and put in a decidedly secondary place the appeals of speculators and sentimentals who allege that the beauty of the mountains would be destroyed by the reservoir--as though a lake of most beautiful water lying at the bottom of a valley surrounded by high mountains could do anything but make more beautiful the whole region.

The Result of Musical Competition in Boston---Big Audiences

Some wise man remarked that competition is the life of trade, and nobody has ever contradicted him, although our capitalists of finance persist in ignoring him.

This adage applies with great fidelity to the musical situation which exists upon upper Huntington avenue between the temples of the Symphony and the Opera.

For several seasons it has seemed as though concerts were languishing in Boston. Very famous singers and instrumentalists have done only fairly well, and the minor performers have been bothered very much by echoes due to empty halls.

In the face of this situation the gentlemen who manage Symphony Hall and the gentlemen who run the Opera conceived the idea of giving fine concerts on Sunday afternoons about 3:15. Mental telepathy is probably responsible for their reception of the same thought at the same time.

Neither would give way and the result is competition of the savage, cruel kind that Charles S. Mellen and other eminent philanthropists declare to be destructive to industry.

Note the result. The people living in Boston and in the suburbs as far away as Worcester and Manchester, N. H., and Providence, E. I., read about the war and get interested. They decide to come to one of the concerts. And instead of dividing the ordinary concert-going public, as was predicted, the rivals draw upon a great public that isn't in the habit of going to concerts at all. Both camps are happy, and Mr. Mellen of the New Haven and Boston & Maine makes a little money that he didn't expect.

The People Could Have Pure Food if They Would Only Use Their Power

Article by Dr. Wiley Calls Attention to Frauds Too Serious to Be Laughed at--Education and United Action Could Quickly Free This Country from the Curse of Adulteration and Fraud.

By GARRETT P. SERVIS

As a general thing, I care little for Thomas Carlyle's writings, but he was a great man, and often he hit the nail on the head with magnificent precision and force. In reading Dr. Wiley's exposure of "glucose, the champion adulterant," in GOOD HOUSEKEEPING for December, I vividly recall some burning sentences in a letter of Carlyle's written more than forty years ago, but sounding like the cry of an honest soul tormented by the frauds of the present day.

"What a contrast," exclaims Carlyle, "between now and, say, only a hundred years ago! At that latter date, or still more comparatively for ages before that, all England awoke to its work with an invocation to the Eternal Maker to bless them in their day's labor, and help them to do it well. Now all England--shopkeepers, workmen, all manner of competing laborers--awaken as if with an unspoken but heartfelt prayer to Beelzebub, 'Oh, help us, thou great lord of shoddy, adulteration and malfeasance, to do our work with a maximum of shams, swiftness, profit and mendacity. For the devil's sake, Amen!'"

What would Carlyle say if he lived in our times and read Dr. Wiley's monthly contribution to the living history of adulteration? I am sure it is not a pleasure to read them, and yet one is both pleased and amused by the exposure of the country's most pernicious frauds. To see fraud unveiled, and amused at the exhibition of guileless innocence, not only on the part of the public, but that of public officials, in permitting their eyes to be blinded by transparent deceptions.

But the thing has become too serious to be laughed at. When many of the staples of life have been so tainted by adulteration and substitution that it is almost impossible to procure them in a pure state, and when the stuff offered in their place is backed up by misrepresentation, overt or concealed, lying and misleading labels, it is time to do something very decided about it.

The people themselves are partly to blame for the situation. When the laws that they have made for their protection are "soured" by manufacturers of substitutes and adulterants, the remedy lies in upholding the hands of honest officers who, as Dr. Wiley did until he was forced out, try to enforce the laws in their true spirit. But back of this lies the need of education. Every head of a family owes it to himself and to those dependent upon him to learn the facts. There is no better way to do this than to read Dr. Wiley's articles.

You can protect yourself by avoiding the use of prepared food-stuffs. When you want honey you want what the bee has made in a laboratory that honest science will tell you it cannot imitate. Beware the genuine bees of the false. are still at work, and you can get the product of their honest labor if you take pains to find it. Although, as Dr. Wiley says, "the bee growers of the country care more being pursued by the cutthroat competition of adulterated honey, glucose playing the star role."

When you see syrup you want the concentrated juice of the maple, or some other sugar-producing plant; you do not want a manufactured conglomeration which in some cases is not what it pretends to be, even when it adopts an apparently outspoken name, and which is pushed upon the market because it is cheap to make and affords enormous profits.

When you give your children candy you want it to be made of genuine sugar, flavored with natural extracts; but, says Dr. Wiley, "the little child who buys a penny's worth of candy is not told that it contains glucose, an insipid substance with just enough stuff in it to make it taste a bit sweet, and plenty of dyes to make it look yellow, pink or green."

If you wish a crushing reply to those who would persuade you that some of these manufactured stuffs are even better for you to eat than the genuine products that they are driving out of the market, then read these same exposures and learn a little chemistry.

And, finally, if you would know how politics plays a part in this war of greed, read the result of an appeal to the President of the United States in a battle for pure food! But politics, dear people, is your own field. YOU make Presidents and other officials, and you can control them IF YOU WILL. We could have only pure foods and pure drugs in this country tomorrow if the united people WILLED IT SO!

The Island of Endless Play By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1912, by American Journal-Budget

S AID Willie to Tom, "Let us live away To the wonderful Island of Endless Play."

It lies off the border of 'No School Land,' And abounds with pleasure, I understand.

There boys go swimming whenever they please In a lovely river right under the trees.

And marbles are free, so you need not buy; And kites of all sizes are ready to fly.

We sail down the isthmes of Idle Delight-- We sail and we sail for a day and a night.

And then, if favored by Willows and breeze, We land in the Harbor of Do-as-You-Please.

And there lies the Island of Endless Play, With no one to say to us, Must, or Nay.

Books are not known in that land so fair, Teachers are stoned if they set foot there.

Hurrah for the Island, so glad and free, That is the country for you and me."

So away went Willie and Tom together On a pleasure boat, in the lazy weather, And they sailed in the teeth of a friendly breeze Right into the harbor of "Do-as-You-Please!" Where boats and tackle and marbles and kites Were waiting them there in this Land of Delights. They dived on the Island of Endless Play For five long years; then one day And a strange dark ship sailed up to the strand, And "Ho! for the voyage to Stupid Land!"

The captain cried, with a terrible noise, As he seized the frightened and struggling boys And threw them into the dark ship's hold; And off and away sailed the captain bold.

They vainly begged him to let them out, He answered only with scoff and shout.

"Boys that don't study or work," said he, "Must sail one day down the Ignorant Sea To Stupid Land by the No-Boat Strait, With Captain Time on the Phlebot Fate!"

He let out the sails and away went the three Over the waters of Ignorant Sea.

Out and away to Stupid Land, And they live there yet, I understand. And there's where every one goes, they say, Who seeks the Island of Endless Play.
